

Warm Spring Indian Children

- At home, children learn by engaging in long periods of observation, silent listening and watching. (vs. elaborate verbal instructions)

- Children then participate in small tasks under adult supervision

- Children then take it upon themselves to test the skill unsupervised and alone, without other people around. (vs. learning through public mistakes as in class discussion)

- Many adults assume the responsibilities for care and instruction of children. Children thus become accustomed to interacting with and following the instructions and orders of many people (vs. teacher)
